

Digital Festival of Nature 2019

"Going Digital"

Between 1-9th June, Festival of Nature trialled a world first - a digital environmental festival. For the very first time, people from all over the globe were able to enjoy a curated selection of talks, events and screenings from the Festival of Nature inside a special, free online version of the festival hosted digitally through a collaboration with our partners at University of Bath and using the iVent platform.

This unique experience included live feeds from Bath and Bristol Festival of Nature weekends and live streams from evening events taking place during the week.

Content included:

- Cutting edge research from the University of Bath including a study into pain which uses motion capture, a video on lab grown meat, a photo exhibition which showcases how research is helping society and lectures from leading academics.
- Live talks from some of Britain's leading nature writers.
- A film with Butterfly Conservation which reveals the morning opening of a Bristol moth trap, with a specialist on hand to do a Q&A on the importance of moths and why we should record them.
- A live film showing the work of the charity Tree Aid, who are developing a huge piece of art in central Bristol to commemorate World Environment Day on 5 June.
- A range of 'how to' guides from Nature Volunteers with advice on how to make a bug hotel, a pine cone bird feeder, wildflower seed balls and a wildlife pond.

Cost: Free to attend

Audience: Families & interested adults

People attending: 130